When Agents Say No to an Assignment and Request Proof of Funds

What to say, how to handle proof of funds, and your two options if they still won't budge.

A lot of listing agents hear "assignable" and assume you're going to lock up their listing, shop it around, and waste their time. Most agents aren't against getting paid. They're against deals falling apart. So don't argue about assignments. Show them the deal is going to close.

Step 1: Reframe It

Say something like:

> "I'm buying this with a cash partner. They've already looked at it and approved it at this price. I'm not tying it up to shop it around or waste your time. This is how we do all of our purchases: the buyer and the money are already lined up. Your seller gets the price we agreed on and the closing date we agreed on."

Being specific is what makes an agent relax: who's paying, and that they've already said yes to this house. Then back it up with proof of funds.

Step 2: When the Agent Asks for Proof of Funds

Most listing agents won't take an offer seriously without proof of funds. You have two options:

Option 1: Use your end buyer's proof of funds. Since you lock in your buyer first, you already have someone with the money. Ask them for a proof of funds letter or a recent bank statement with the account numbers blacked out. Always ask your buyer's permission before you send their info to anyone.

Option 2: Get a lender letter in your name. If you don't have your end buyer yet, or your buyer doesn't want their info shared, search "DoubleClose proof of funds request" on Google and request a proof of funds letter from the lender, in your name. It works well because it's real funding you can actually use if the deal turns into a double close.

If they still say no to the assignment, you have two options.

Option A: JV the Deal With Real Venture (Easiest)

If you get a property under contract and the agent won't allow an assignment, submit it to us through the Deals button in the Studio. For more info on how it works, check the link in the #deals channel in Discord.

If the deal needs a double close, our transaction coordination team handles the entire process for you: funding, title, and both closings. You don't have to figure any of it out.

You keep your share of the profit after all costs:

Base	Pro	Ultra
50%	60%	70%

"After all costs" means the double close fees and closing costs come out first, then the profit is split. Using the example in Option B, a $20,000 spread with about $4,000 in costs leaves $16,000:

Base (50%)	$8,000
Pro (60%)	$9,600
Ultra (70%)	$11,200

If this is your first or second deal, this is the move. A double close has a lot of moving parts, and one mistake can kill the deal.

Option B: Double Close It Yourself

In a double close you actually buy the property, then resell it to your buyer, usually the same day. It happens as two separate closings:

- Closing 1 (A to B): You buy from the seller.
- Closing 2 (B to C): You sell to your end buyer.

Since you're really buying it, the agent and seller don't care about assignment. They just see a normal buyer closing.

The catch is that you need money to buy it for those few hours. That's what transactional funding is for: a lender gives you 100% of the purchase price for Closing 1, and the end buyer's money from Closing 2 pays them back the same day.

How to do it, step by step

1. Get the property under contract in your name or your LLC. Make sure your closing date gives you enough time to line up funding and your buyer.
2. Lock in your end buyer with a signed contract. Get their proof of funds. If they're financing, get their lender's commitment. The transactional lender won't fund without this, because your buyer is how they get paid back.

3 Find a transactional lender. Search "transactional funding" or "double close funding" plus the state the property is in. You can also ask in the community chat or ask other students for recommendations. Before you commit, ask the lender:
   • What's your fee? Flat or a percentage?
   • Is everything paid at closing out of my profit, or is anything due upfront?
   • What documents do you need, and how far before closing?
   • Do you fund in this state?
   • Do you have title companies you already work with?

4 Find a title company that does double closings in the property's state. This is where most beginners get stuck, because a lot of title companies won't do them. Call before you need them and ask:
   • Do you handle double closings with transactional funding?
   • Can you close both sides on the same day?
   You can also search "investor friendly title company" plus the property's city, or ask in the community chat for recommendations.

5 Send both contracts to the lender and the title company. The lender needs both signed contracts, your buyer's proof of funds, and the title company's info.

6 Close. The lender wires the money, you buy the property, your buyer closes, the lender gets paid back, and you get your profit.

What you pay out of pocket

Some transactional lenders take their fee and the closing costs out of your profit at closing, so you don't pay for the funding upfront. Always confirm with the lender whether anything is due upfront before you sign with them.

What it costs (example)

You buy for	$150,000
You sell for	$170,000
Spread	$20,000
Transactional funding fee (1% of $150,000)	- $1,500
Closing costs on both closings (varies by state)	- $2,500
You walk with	$16,000

Funding fees usually run a flat $750 to $2,500, or 1% to 2% of the loan. That's why a double close works best on bigger spreads. On a $5,000 spread, the fees can eat most of your profit.

Quick Summary

1. Reframe: "I'm buying this with a cash partner who already approved it. Your seller gets their price and their date." Back it up with your buyer's proof of funds or a lender letter in your name.
2. Still no? Submit it through the Studio and JV with us. We handle the double close and you keep 50%, 60%, or 70% of the profit after costs.
3. Want to do it yourself? Lock your buyer, get a transactional lender, and find a title company that does double closings in the property's state. Run the fees before you commit.
